Pentagon said Tuesday to be ‘considering’ Russian asylum requests, even as Trump warns Moscow not to meddle in upcoming election. Pentagon officials said Tuesday that the US military is considering giving Russian diplomats residency in the United States after an official from the Kremlin visited US troops in Germany. The Pentagon’s news release said, “A senior Department of Defense official visited the [German] 4th Infantry Division in Ansbach on Tuesday and met with Russian military attache Alexei Arbuzov.” “At the meeting, they exchanged views on opportunities to enhance military-to-military relations between the two militaries and considered Russian security interests in Germany,” the statement continued. But the Russian officials are not being allowed to stay in the US due to federal law that does not allow US officials to reside in Russia, a State Department official said. “The US Department of State has no authority to issue a visa or a work visa, and it is a crime for any US citizen to enter or reside in Russia without a visa,” the official said. Trump told reporters on Tuesday that Moscow should not meddle in the US presidential election in November. “I think we ought to get along with Russia, and if Russia wants to be nice to us, that’s fine,” Trump said. “If they do something with respect to us, it's fine," he added. Trump said he was "not so much worried about what Russia is doing in terms of President Obama" as he was "concerned with what [Russian President Vladimir] Putin may be doing" in a reference to Moscow's alleged meddling in the 2016 election. 2d92ce491b
