Newswise — Researchers have discovered how our bodies identify our own cells as they pass through the bloodstream, which may be key to fighting cancer and other deadly diseases. In a study of mice, the Michigan Cancer Foundation-funded team at the University of Michigan found that healthy blood cells recognize invading cancer cells or foreign invaders and target them for destruction. It's the first time such self-defense behavior -- known as immunosurveillance -- has been reported for blood cells in living, moving animals, said Matthew Pearce, Ph.D., a postdoctoral fellow in bioengineering at the university and lead author of the study. "We were surprised to find this immunosurveillance system in circulating blood cells -- cells that are constantly moving and often lost in traditional experiments, said Pearce, who conducted the study while a graduate student in U-M's Department of Bioengineering. "We were further ba244e880a
