downloadQ: OpenCL code when double to pointer and pointer to double Is the following opencl code correct, and if it is what happens in the kernel? I am not sure what happens at line 3 and 4. I think that double v2 is a pointer to a pointer to double, so it should be replaced by double* in line 3. I am confused how to replace pointers by double __kernel void readpwd(__global double* v2, __global int* v3, __global double* v4) { int id = get_global_id(0); int val = atomicMin(1, id); int index = val*1.0 + 0.0; v2[index] = atomicAdd(1.0, v2[index]); v3[val] = atomicAdd(1, v3[val]); v4[id] = atomicAdd(1, v4[id]); } A: First of all, the first three variables are kernel variables. As such, they should not be global variables. This would result in incorrect usage of OpenCL, as OpenCL only supports local variables (variables in the scope of the current kernel). Secondly, double v2 and int* v3 will be passed to the kernel, not double* v2 and int* v3. This is because you expect the compiler to automatically optimize a "pointer-to-pointer" as a "pointer-to-pointer". If it was allowed, the whole kernel would be extremely inefficient, as it would be

What others say This is a beautiful artistic print of two blue banners, one with a red cross and the other with a yellow cross. It is made from high quality photo paper and printed on an Epson printer. This print is approx. 6 x 6 inches and comes in a hard case. This print is not 3D, it is actually a print on paper. It's perfect for everyone who buy this product, because it has two effects, one effect is just printing, the other effect is 3D effect These are a few examples of what you may find. My wife and I are sharing these examples with all of you in order to inform you more about the benefits of babysitting and how it can help your baby and you to live a more harmonious, productive life. fffad4f19a
