By Mariette DeWerff, Ph.D., on April 16, 2020 Copyright (c) 1996 by Mariette DeWerff, Ph.D. I made this translation after the close of a seminar on psychoanalysis held at the Washington Freud Museum in April 1995. The aim of this seminar was to discuss interpretations in light of the work of Philip Morris and E. T. Winslow and to discuss the future of the psychoanalytic method. More than half of the class was composed of physicians. Other than the director and my colleague, there were only two or three of us, but we took the seminar seriously. This translation is a product of that seminar. In 1997 I published The New Age of Psychoanalysis, which was awarded the Washington State Book Award in the category of classics. That book was an attempt to clarify certain points that were misunderstood in the growing New Age movement that had developed over the last twenty years. (See, for example, my article on the "New Age and psychoanalysis" in the November 2003 issue of the American Imago.)

That work was dedicated to Philip Morris, the founder of the Washington Freud Museum and a major source of the developments discussed in this text. It is fortunate that I made the translation in 1995, because when I was invited to speak at the Washington Freud Museum in February 1996, I was asked to discuss the translation of the new version of The New Age of Psychoanalysis. When the seminar on interpretation opened at the museum, I was the first to speak. I proposed to abandon my translation and offer it as an alternative to the translation of the new edition published the following year. At first, the interest in my translation was much less than that for the new edition. The next speaker, Philip Morris, mentioned that he had seen my translation and would prefer to use it over the new one. With his enthusiastic help, the seminar began to move toward the dissemination of the translation. After that, another participant, Stanley Strauss, of the National Institute for the Psychological Sciences, in California, said that he had received a letter from a group in the Netherlands who were planning to translate the translation of the new edition of The New Age of Psychoanalysis into Dutch. In response to that, Strauss and I agreed to collaborate on a book that would discuss the translation of The New Age of Psychoanalysis into English. We began to write the book, working with considerable enthusiasm. We encountered new difficulties every day f3e1b3768c
