Category:Photo softwareSolvent properties and structure determine the preference of azo groups in the chromatography of uronic acids. The lignin phenolic acid family is characterized by the presence of two or more azo (N=N) groups associated with the carbohydrates. It was demonstrated that, while 4-aminoazobenzeneboronic acid (ABA) is a universal chromophore for the zwitterionic lignosulphonates of phenolic acids, the azo groups can be cleaved to form soluble benzene-1,4-diols. It was demonstrated that, although the dibenzylic hydroxyl groups of ABA are cleaved in the presence of phenolic acids, the dicarboxylic azo groups remain as a stable marker of the phenolic acids in reversed-phase chromatography. It was also observed that phenolic acids possessing charged functional groups such as quaternary ammonium or sulfonate groups can form hydrogen bonds with ABA and therefore bind ABA 3ef4e8ef8d
