trips so that they can be at their own homes when they return. The process is a bit tedious, and clearly requires a boatload of confidence in Amazon's shipping system. That can make it a bit expensive if you're looking to buy your kid something big and heavy. So Amazon has now launched a $100 Amazon Key product, which lets a thief simply walk into your home, unlock the device, and then walk out with it. Inside, the device is equipped with a code entry sensor, a timer, and a microphone. If you're feeling particularly paranoid, you can also set a passcode on the device, to prevent the whole process of unlocking the device, and then leaving. Don't get too excited -- these aren't the first such locks for your home. There are other products out there that are similar, including the relatively famous Kwikset Kevo (though that's not cheap either, at $190). As for this device, Amazon says it costs $100 plus tax, and that it arrives in 7 days. If it works as well as Amazon says it will, it could make a decent way of keeping your home secure while also making it easier for parents to send their kids on overnight trips. Today is a day in which I am both really blessed and really humbled. And to start, I am humbled, because all I want for me is to get older. I want to be older because I want to be so much more than I am, so that I can be better at me. I want to be more like Jesus, someone who at the age of 30 is more beautiful than a girl I saw at the age of 10. It's a deep desire, I know, but I feel like if I'm doing everything I'm
