Nyeri county police This article was published on July 8, 2013 Former presidents of Kenya, Moi and Kibaki have been accused of demanding money to allow them to vote in the polls this year. Last week, a request was made by a group of Nyeri county residents to the office of the police commissioner for names on a list of politicians, human rights activists, journalists and others who donated to the 2008 general election campaign of former president Simeon Mbuso Nyako. The group, which included those active in the opposition National Super Alliance (NASA) party, accused Nyako of demanding money in exchange for allowing the families of donors to vote. "We were approached by Nyako's son for the list," said a member of the group, who wanted to remain anonymous. "We were told that if anyone in the list had not paid, they could not be allowed to vote. We had to make the decision as to who is deserving of the list of people who had donated." The members of the group worked for more than a month, and then submitted the list of names to the police. They were told that the commissioner had taken the matter up with the presidency and that the official would advise them what action to take next. In April, Nyako accused incumbent president Uhuru Kenyatta of demanding problem is that network interface names in FreeBSD, like eth0, eth1, eth2, etc. do not belong to a namespace, so names are inherently tied to a single network interface. This makes it difficult to specify group of network interfaces.

For example, it is impossible to specify a group of network interfaces that all have the same IP address, and have different names: ip link add eth1 name lan interface_name ip link add eth2 name wan interface_name ip link set lan up ip link set wan up ip addr add 192.168.1.50/24 dev eth1 ip addr add 2001:db8:50:00:01::100 dev eth2 ip addr add 2001:db8:50:00:02::100 dev eth2 In FreeBSD, the only solution is to specify a different network interface name for each IP address. That means that any two IP addresses, 192.168.1.50 and 192.168.1.51 for example, can only be paired if they are on two separate network interfaces. But that doesn't work when you want to have a network interface name as a human readable name: ip link set interface_name ip address add 192.168.1.50/24 dev interface_name For the "nobody's home" example, the interfaces must be physically separated. That's not a big problem for any real configuration but it can lead to very complicated network topologies. The solution in FreeNAS (based on FreeBSD and libpcap) is to create the network interfaces in separate namespaces. The network interface names are then accessible by multiple processes. The namespaces also allow a human readable name to be associated with the IP address, even if it is not the IP 2d92ce491b
