A report published in January by the independent research group, the Sustainable Development Policy Institute, showed that in some of Ontario's largest cities, the cost of owning a two-bedroom apartment is equivalent to the median household income in a given area. "It's not affordable housing," Ms. Bhat said. "It's just rent." Ms. Bhat lives with her parents in an apartment building in Scarborough, which has been in her family for more than 40 years. She worked in social services and now makes her living doing real estate. She said that her parents have noticed some effects of Toronto's rental crisis in the past couple of years. They, too, have a minimum rent obligation. Their rent goes up every year, but it is not the same amount. "Every year it's a little bit more than the year before," Ms. Bhat said. "I think they are getting older, so they might not be as adaptable. They might not move." Since Ms. Bhat and her brother began renting, she said that the family's income from their parents, who work in the public sector, has not increased because they must pay for her brother's rent. "I have to send them
