Photos Members About Sounds Video: Biography Popularly known as "The Egg Man", more than 35 years of Pop Punk music's been rocking the over-the-top sounds of over 100 million albums sold, earning the title as the most successful, influential, and longest-running rock band in history. Born on May 14, 1954 in Whittier, California, The New Underground was formed in 1979 by lead singer/guitarist Andy Babiuk and bassist Davey Faragher. Their first demo recording was released in the summer of 1980 and after extensive touring on the west coast they signed with MCA Records in 1982. Unfortunately, Andy's throat was sore for the duration of the tour and he was forced to sit out the recording and eventual release of the album 'New Underground' which proved to be a weak album at best, failing to find commercial success. In 1983 Babiuk and Faragher were dismissed from the band due to a contract dispute with MCA. Just about a month after their firing, Babiuk and Faragher recruited four other musicians, drummer Scott "Sunny" Smith, saxophonist Jim Adkins, guitarist Tim Pike, and drummer James Michael Lucas, to make up the core of a new group called The Edsels. Babiuk and Lucas were joined by former Edsel guitarists Chris Fehn and Marius Mueller. The Edsels recorded the remaining tracks for the New Underground album and it was released the following year. The group toured the east coast until 1989, when Babiuk and Lucas split the band up. Babiuk continued to put out various solo albums, and Lucas went on to form his own band, Endless Wishes, and then in 2005 reunited with Babiuk as The New Underground. The Edsels were rounded out by Jim Adkins, Tim Pike and drummer Jeff Peterson, and the band has enjoyed a steady touring schedule since 1989. They have sold over two million records worldwide to date, with the recording of the follow-up New Underground album 'Underground In Your Face' remaining unreleased. In 1998 the band added singer/guitarist David Alford to their ranks, and with a
