
Conditional statement that compares two variables to determine the outcome of a macro. For example, suppose a macro needs to compare two variables: a number and a string. If the number is greater than zero, the macro displays a message, and exits. If the string is a series of characters ending in a space, the macro displays a message, and then displays the string before exiting. macro, filename, output-file, line-number, minimum-number, maximum-number, line-length KEYMACRO {keyword} Optional; Must follow {character}. If keyword is missing, the user must type a character to activate the keyword. If the user types a key that is not listed as a keyword, a message appears and the macro is skipped. Use the first keyword of a macro that is defined in the current workbook. The first keyword for a macro is usually the same as the first keyword in the first command of the macro. Without the keyword, {character} is the same as character. Character; Name of the character. The character is the value of the keyword. The format of the character is {character}, and can be a constant or a variable. {character} {character} Character; Name of the character. The character is the value of the keyword. The format of the character is {character}, and can be a constant or a variable.
