Category:KORGQ: Usage of "do not" in Rambam The Rambam says that My obligation to myself is to give precedence to my superior, even to the point of not doing anything in his behalf. What is the difference between do not and not doing in this sentence? A: Yes, there is a difference, although it is often negligible. One may read the Rambam's words as follows: My obligation to myself is to give precedence to my superior, even to the point of not doing anything in his behalf. This is because "not doing anything" is synonymous with "not doing" and therefore should be followed by an appropriate case marker (e.g. "in his behalf"). Or, one may read the sentence as: My obligation to myself is to give precedence to my superior, even to the point of not doing anything. This is because "do not" is a prepositional phrase, and can therefore be placed before or after the main verb. In this case, it would probably be best to place it before the main verb, as the main verb can be read to imply that the obligation to oneself is to not do anything.
