The magazine was designed to counter what Simon viewed as the "official literature" and "well-intentioned" writing coming from South Africa's literary establishment. For example, Can Themba became the first black South African writer to be published in the magazine in its first edition, on June 1, 1964.[2] 1 Can Themba, "The Suit," in The Classic No. 1 (June 1964): 27-35, at 28. In other stories he created an imagined universe in which the slaves created the memory of freedom into the stone "fossils" of the new buildings, the sweet potato crop became a symbol of the resilience of black Africans in their struggle for freedom, and what to him was "the most striking feature" of Sophiatown was the ability of the community to reinvent itself and turn tragedy into triumph.2 The Classic No. 1 (June 1964): 27. 2 can Themba, "The Suit," in ibid., at 28.
