She was offered chemotherapy, but refused it, explaining that she had a strong family history of cancer and did not want her children to be exposed to the risk of malignancy. In May 2010, she underwent exploratory laparotomy, which showed a large necrotic tumor in the hepatic hilum, as well as another tumor, more numerous and smaller, in the vicinity of the right renal vein. Resection was performed, the tumor in the hepatic hilum and the right kidney were removed with their adjacent perinephritic fat, and the tumor found in the lymph nodes was totally excised. She received a postoperative radiotherapy and had no further complications. Any raw assets you want to be deployed with your application can be placed in this directory (and child directories) and given a Build Action of "AndroidAsset". These files will be deployed with your package on discovery of the Android or AndroidGradle projects, e.g. when building or running your Android app, or installing the Android app bundle via Android Studio. Alternatively, the files may be deployed with the Android app bundle by building an APK and including the built asset files in the APK. Android Studio automates this process using the "Android Raw Asset" plugin. If this directory (and all child directories) is not present on disk, it will be recreated by the build system. This file is an example that explains how to use this file. Instructions on compiling source assets into APK files can be found on the Android developer website: The code is in the pubspec.yaml file. This file is a simple file. Run this command and follow the instructions. It will work and compile. > flutter run --launch-path=@1/test 0.0.1111 | flutter | assets |
