Its an aircraft.. one plane was severely damaged.. this is a big issue because this plane cost at least $2,000,000.. But i got this in a trade and can't put it back to its place.. the plane is 8 seater with limited leg space.. the person who gave me the aircraft told me it was majesticky and the seat belts were broken.. Do any body know about the problem? Q: UITableView's controller I have a UITableViewController in a storyboard which loads a UITableView. When I click on a cell, another UIViewController is loaded. How can I set the initial View Controller in the storyboard and not in code? I'm using the'segue' to control the transition. Thanks, A: Create a segue from the source view controller to the target view controller. Then set the segue's destination controller property to the target view controller. You can also set the identifier for the segue in the storyboard to a custom identifier (such as "cellSegue"). You could also set the segue in the code by using prepareForSegue to set the view controller's target property.
