In the mid-infrared (MIR) spectral range, the very strong absorption of water is both a limitation of the detection of atmospheric trace gases and a practical challenge for the analysis of most astronomical objects. In this paper, we show that by the proper sequential addition of water vapour, its bandwidth in the MIR can be suppressed up to 80%, thus allowing a successful detection of the other atmospheric trace gases. To this end, the mid-infrared spectral range has been recently analyzed by iterative gradient ascent, a non-local smoothing algorithm which allows to deal with the low signal-to-noise ratio in the presence of the broad absorbance due to water. Compared to classical non-local filtering methods, in the MIR the iterative gradient ascent appears more flexible in terms of convergence. We present a detailed description of the algorithm and a proof of concept, which is applied to the MIR spectrum of a laboratory sample taken from a cloud water droplet falling on a potassium bromide surface. The technique is suitable for a wide variety of atmosphere-less astronomical sources.

A seven-year-old girl with autism hanged herself in a primary school bathroom in southern France, officials said. "The girl's family found her death on Sunday morning in her classroom at the Petit Verdout school in Arles after giving her usual lessons in the morning," Claude Galopin, Arles prosecutor, said on Monday. Initial reports claimed that the girl hanged herself with her scarf, but Galopin said police had not found evidence of the alleged suicide attempt. Galopin said a technical investigation had started to establish whether the girl had been left alone with a mobile phone or someone had entered her classroom. "There are no signs of violence, other than a slight abrasion on the lower back," he said, adding that this
