A: That's the infamous PGP signature, meant to prevent man-in-the-middle attacks. It's a piece of information that is built into the file you downloaded, and is usually used as a check to make sure that you didn't intercept the download and just give it to the hacker. If it's at the start of the file, it's not doing you much good, so, by itself, this is not a guarantee that the file you downloaded was legitimately released by the hacker. If you want the entire page, then you can download it using wget or curl: wget wget If you want the signature itself, then you can't do that with wget or curl. You will have to use a program that does the downloading in order to get it: wget wget To verify that your download is legitimate: curl
