Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to capacitive touch screen devices and, more particularly, to a method and apparatus for self-calibration of capacitive touch screens. 2. Description of the Related Art Touch screen devices are known in the prior art. Conventional touch screens provide an image displayed on a device by coupling the image to a display screen. A user provides a selection or input to the touch screen by touching the surface of the screen. One of the problems with conventional touch screen devices is that the touch screen surface has a limited surface area. This limits the size of a device or picture that can be displayed on a conventional touch screen device. Capacitive touch screen devices are also known in the prior art. One particular type of capacitive touch screen device is a multi-touch screen. A multi-touch screen provides multiple touch points that allow a user to select and move a cursor on a touch screen. One problem with a multi-touch screen is that the capacitive touch screen requires the supply of charge on the conductive (usually metal) plane. One of the problems with supplying charge to the conductive plane is that it is difficult to prevent the charge from being shorted out to ground. This problem is magnified when multi-touch screens are used in areas of high electrical or electromagnetic noise. Also, conventional multi-touch screens that use for example a 6xc3x976 matrix of capacitors require that the circuit board to which the capacitors are attached have very high precision. Since the capacitors are soldered directly to the board, the soldering process is typically done at a time when the design has not yet been finalised. This can result in some capacitors being placed in the wrong position. This problem is magnified when a large number of capacitors are required, such as a 16xc3x9716 matrix of capacitors. Another problem with capacitive multi-touch screens is that they tend to work well only

Blanchard proposed to separate the criteria for pedophilia as sexual attraction to prepubertal children, who are usually younger than 11 years old, and hebephilia as . Although in some countries (for example, in Russia) hebephilia is recognized as a criminal offense, with the possible exception of some regions of China, in France it is not punished in any way and is decriminalized. In general, "sexual perversion" can be called any manifestation of sexual interests and fantasies that is contrary to accepted social norms in society. fffad4f19a
