In the present paper we describe new features of the macronucleus of the monstrillid nematode Pedariptya luschnani (Kinberg, 1867) n. sp., which is characterized by a ring of prominent nuclei disposed in the rostral part of the animal. Metrical measurements of the nuclear ring as well as of the oral and ventral hypodermal nuclei are presented. Another characteristic is the position of the macronucleus relative to the micronucleus and hypodermis. In relation to the last two, the macronucleus is intercalated between the hypodermis and an oral portion of the hypodermis. ♦ what we're going to do."
