Aaron Thorner, 24, and his girlfriend, Stephanie, 22, put their plan to move in together to one side while Stephanie, a schoolteacher, spends her spare time selling on eBay. They turned their garage, which measures just 120cm wide by 52cm high, into their next-door neighbours Roy and Jess Ferguson's storage cupboard and live in a loft apartment above it. Download the new Independent Premium app Sharing the full story, not just the headlines The space is stuffed with junk from their twobedroom London flat which they have moved out. The household bits and pieces include a second-hand fridge, old bikes and oven, while cardboard boxes and canvas bags are piled on the floor. Their miniature home has no running water or electricity, but is wired up to their loft where is an old TV, a PlayStation 2 and a bed. "Our living room is upstairs," says Aaron. "We're not going to do any entertaining in the house. We're going to save up to buy a bed and kitchen table." As Stephanie says: "It's like a home away from home." Inside the cabinet, the couple
