For information about the website, see: Weather Underground. As of version 1.7.1, there is a new section called 'Weather Underground widgets', showing a nice interface on the desktop to get the current weather conditions no matter where you are. In order to use it, you need to install the Yahoo Widget Engine which is available on the Yahoo! Download site. If you do not have an account with Yahoo, then you will first have to register for one. before you can use the 'Weather Underground widgets'. You can also view the weather in the interface, by clicking on the weather icon on the top menu bar. Weather Underground. Note: This application is still in development and does not work properly with all third-party programs. If it does not work with your third-party program, please try to reinstall the application and see if this solves the problem. You can display the current weather conditions for more than one city (and maybe the weather for more than one month in the future), by selecting the '+' sign on the top menu bar. If you select the 'Calculate' option, you get a warning that some of the weather stations are not working correctly, so the result is not reliable, and you should be very careful in the use of the results. The 'Get weather for the nearest city' option works with all weather stations, and is the recommended option. You can also filter the results by entering the location in the search box in the top right corner of the widget. Note: The weather data is updated hourly, and is usually about 5-15 minutes behind the current weather conditions. "Weather Underground (or WU)" is the title of a feature in Windows that is used for storing and displaying weather data. The "weather data" is mostly weather forecasts and weather
