Watch out for attachments that look suspicious. The sender may use a scam to steal your information, get your passwords, or install malicious software. Be wary of spam email that promises you can get rich quickly. These emails often ask for your personal information, like your bank account number or credit card number, to get started. If you get a message like this, think twice about what you are doing, and then contact your bank or credit card company for more information. Microsoft Outlook may have a program already installed to scan your mail for viruses and spam. If you want to take a more proactive approach, you can also scan the attachments in your email inbox, as we'll show you in this tip. Select any message in the folder where your spam comes from, and then click the View tab. In the drop-down menu, click More. On the Get Info screen, click the Open button on the Scan for Viruses and Spam button. The Scan for Viruses and Spam screen will appear. If you don't see any available virus and spam scanners, Microsoft has already installed one of them in Outlook. The Scan for Viruses and Spam screen will then open. Click the Start button. The antivirus scan will begin. This can take a few minutes, depending on the size of your attachment. If the scan finds a virus or spam, the attached program may be quarantined for security reasons. If the attachment is not quarantined, open it in your desktop or web browser, and then delete it. This tip can also be applied to scanning attachments in your email messages.
