I need to find a general Newton-Raphson for $f(x) = \exp(\sin x)/x$ and $g(x) = x^3+1$ and a computer told me that this is something involving secant equations. I've looked for references on how to solve a secant equation and I've seen some detailed explanations of how to do it for specific problems. However, this is the first I've seen a general solution for a secant equation. If someone could provide a general solution and/or reference I would really appreciate it. A: The solution you have looks pretty much OK. If your computer gave you this solution then it probably implemented the bisection method. For simple problems like this one, it is much faster to use bisection with the initial value $x_0=0$, then the computer uses $$x_{n+1} = \frac{1}{2} \left(x_n + \frac{f(x_n)}{g'(x_n)} \right)$$
 You have to define x_1 and x_2 appropriately, but this method will find the root in a number of iterations which is of the order of the number of significant digits of $f(x)$ and $g(x)$. 1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method for detecting a pathologic state of an object, and a method for treating a pathologic state of an object, both of the methods being used for a diagnosis and/or therapy of a pathologic state of an object. 2. Description of the Related Art A pathologic state of an object refers to a state caused by a disease or abnormal function of a living body, that is, a state in which part of the body is in a disordered state. A pathologic state is often caused by an abnormal state of the balance between a cell and a biomolecule, and a pathologic state can be often treated if an abnormal state of the balance between a cell and a biomolecule is identified. As an example of a pathologic state of an object, a pathologic state of a cancer can be cited. As a method for detecting a pathologic state of an object, an immuno
