What's New In Auto Dialer Pro?

In addition to handling multiple lists, you can also collect, store and reuse data in the form of logs and recordings. Such data are essentially WAV files or voice recordings, which you can record on your PC (for example, in MPG format). The time of recording can be set up according to your needs. The user interface is quite friendly: You can select the button for the program to be automatically started during your Windows startup, so that it will work in the background (and be ready for the next phone call without your having to open a separate process manually). Moreover, while playing a recorded message, you can set up the volume of the recorded speech automatically. You can play multiple WAV files at a time, which will be named according to a given format. You can also generate a list with all phone numbers, which will be sorted according to given criteria (country, area/city code, carrier code, etc.). In order to make the process of dialing manageable, you can create automatic dial lists, where you can define messages to be played on different phone numbers. You can make your calls automatically or manually. When the call is answered, the tool will take the incoming call information and automatically assign one of the pre-programmed messages to the dialed number. You can define the order in which you want calls to be forwarded to the phone number. Finally, you may define which calls should be repeated (with a given period of time). You can save and load the list of phone numbers, and carry out different WAV file-related operations. You may create profiles, which may be used to define the number of phone calls to be carried out and the timing for such calls. You can also convert a list of phone numbers to a phone call queue. In the same way, you may remove phone call logs after a given time interval.
