One year ago today: "Dr. Oetker's decision to eat garlic is, as you can well imagine, something very few people are able to do with absolute success, even with great care. However, Dr. Oetker, who thought the experiment would keep him busy in the kitchen for the whole summer, was quite disappointed to discover that in fact it only delayed the production of garlic for a few weeks only. It is true that if the weather conditions are bad, the garlic heads will keep growing for a while, until they get so big that they require quite some time and energy for harvesting. Normally, they would be harvested in full, but after so many weeks, the time was too short. However, Dr. Oetker's experiment proved that we are not yet able to pick the garlic we need just by opening a box of golden, fresh and crunchy garlic. We are also able to create this golden, fresh and crunchy garlic in a very short time." Yesterday afternoon: "It's official, there is no huge surplus of fresh garlic available in the world. Just one and a half hours ago, it was a euro per kilo. To put that into perspective, as we all know, the current price of a kilo of garlic is currently around 9.5 euros. This was mostly due to
