"One must not lose sight of the fact that the future of our people is in agriculture, not only because it is our backbone and economy but also because it is the key to the future of our people," Masilela said at the launch of the 2018 State of Agriculture in South Africa. In his address to the opening of the conference, the minister said South Africa needed to look beyond the city limits to secure a better future for its citizens. He said the rural sector and agriculture needed to be elevated to a higher level of importance, "not to make the city special but rather to make the country special". Masilela said research should be directed towards addressing the gaps in development. "There must be a joined effort between researchers and those who are implementing on the ground. Chips in the magnetic field are exploited to show that, for spin systems with short-range interactions, the only way to have nonequilibrium stationary states with energy probability densities finite in the thermodynamic limit is to introduce a dissipation mechanism through the coupling to an external reservoir, with entropy production positive. This is a sufficient condition for thermodynamic stability and establishes the validity of the fluctuation-dissipation theorem for nonequilibrium stationary states in spin systems. NEW DELHI: Investors are returning to stocks in a big way, indicating that they are not panicking after a weak opening in stock markets on Friday. They seem to have forgiven the government's inability to send key data early this year. Market watchers believe that they are waiting for the outcome of the general elections and are confident of a positive response if it is in the government's favour. "The data has not shown any bad news in the last couple of months. This has put to rest the concern that markets were moving higher based on the poor industrial and macroeconomic data. The return of capital into the market is not surprising in view of the election outcome," said Shubhada Rao, head of research, HDFC Securities. Meanwhile, many foreign institutional investors (FIIs) are coming back into Indian stock markets. "Since February, FIIs have been coming back into the market, we expect that they will do so till the elections. ♦ 4bc0debe42
