Thanks for your feedback. Expected output: . <> Go away. Thanks for your feedback. A: If you don't know a language, but you know some syntax, then you might want to consider using a regular expression. I happen to be familiar with Perl, so I'll use that. As you can see, regex is quite powerful. However, it won't work in this case because you are expecting a fixed string that matches with the number, but it doesn't. You could use matching groups, but that's a bit tricky. Here is my solution, based on a previous question I answered. $string = 'go away'; $string_parts = explode(' ', $string); if (preg_match('/^.+ go away (.+)/', $string_parts[1], $matches) { echo "matches with ".$matches[1].""; } I'm basically using a string match to find out the right number (the beginning 'go away' being the delimiter), then calling it
