Does bilateral contact lens wear increase tear film thickness? A pilot study. To investigate the hypothesis that bilateral rigid contact lens wear increases tear film thickness. Bilateral rigid soft contact lens wear was assessed in 15 participants. Tear breakup time (TBUT), Schirmer I test, and ocular surface staining were performed at baseline and after 1 week of wearing a non-adaptive rigid soft lens (MRCL). Tear volume was measured with the Ocular Surface Disease Index (OSDI). Left- and right-eye TBUT in each participant ranged from 5 to 9 seconds (mean  $\pm$  standard deviation [SD],  $7.60 \pm 1.43$  seconds). Left- and right-eye Schirmer I test results ranged from 31 to 54 mm (mean,  $41.15 \pm 5.31$  mm). Overall, ocular surface staining was less than or equal to mild in intensity. After week 1 of MRCL wear, left- and right-eye TBUT ranged from 3 to 10 seconds (mean,  $5.93 \pm 1.54$  seconds), Schirmer I test results ranged from 32 to 57 mm (mean,  $42.85 \pm 3.91$  mm), and ocular surface staining was mild or less. Tear volume ranged from 3.5 to 5.7  $\mu$ L (mean,  $4.85 \pm 0.53$   $\mu$ L). One week of MRCL wear did not increase tear film thickness as measured by TBUT, Schirmer I test, and ocular surface staining. The MRCL is a practical, comfortable, and cost-effective solution for a mild to moderate increase in tear film thickness in healthy or nearsighted participants. I did with Turtle Lake Rodeo." At Phoenix Central Justin Johnson: "It was just a bunch of guys hooting and hollering. It was just a bunch of the sorority girls, and they were hooting and hollering and yelling and crying. It was really awesome." Emily Gilman: "I watched the boys barrel race and they got to the top of the barrel, but they weren't the last ones on the barrel. The other two in front of them didn't get down and they fell off the back end of the barrel, and they weren't very far up the track so they just scraped a little bit and then got back on the track and finished the race. It was really cool."

Effects of sleep and circadian misalignment on daily baseline and functional blood pressure. Different time-of-day effects on blood pressure (BP) have been described. To evaluate the clinical impact of the varying changes in BP over the course of the day due to the effects of the circadian and sleep/wake cycles, we assessed ambulatory BP in a variety of different working populations undergoing standardized conditions of sleep/wake schedules. The study comprised three groups: (1) subjects free-living for 4 days in the laboratory; (2) shift workers on a routine 9-to-6 day shift; (3) police officers who are free-living during the night period of the duty and are waken up between 00:00 and 05:00 h. BP was measured every 15 min by a nurse and every hour by a nurse and an observer, throughout the last 2 nights of the baseline period. In both the free-living and shift-working groups, daily SBP and DBP showed morning-waking dips and increased night-dipping dips after sleep was scheduled between 18:00 and 23:00 h. In the policemen, work schedules caused sleep/wake misalignment, resulting in morning and night maximum SBP and DBP. High-working-intensity activities and alcohol consumption during the night period in the policemen were identified as the main factors involved in the observed increase in blood pressure. Although there was an increase in BP, as measured during the night hours, this did not lead to any higher cardiovascular morbidity and mortality or to hypertension. Sleep and circadian misalignment is more likely a functional BP change than a causal factor for long-term cardiovascular risk. Nasal potential difference in diagnosing acute rhinosinusitis in adults. Standard diagnostics of rhinosinusitis are based on medical history and nasal endoscopy. The nasal potential difference (NPD) has been used extensively in research on the epidermal ion transport pathway, but rarely in clinical practice. The aim of this study was to determine the usefulness of NPD in diagnosing acute rhinosinusitis (ARS). Sixty-two inpatients with diagnosed ARS (n = 50) or recurrent acute sinusitis (RAS) (n = 12) were enrolled in this prospective study. NPD was obtained by nasal swab of the lateral nasal wall. Data were analyzed on NPD and endoscopic findings according to ARS, RAS, and a control group. NPD in ARS (4

System Requirements For Photoshop CC 2015:

Each player is presented with a Pong-like screen. Click on the screen to play. In Pong mode, the players can't see what the other player is doing, and when they click on the screen, both of them get bumped. If you play against a friend, they might get their ball stuck and start shouting at you. Do NOT start shouting back. From the main menu, choose the "Chat" tab to chat to your friend over a fast, asynchronous, real-time text-based chat.
