Saving from Photoshop Elements Photoshop Elements 15 introduces a version of the "Save for Web" button. This option will display on the right-hand side of the Photoshop Elements "File" menu. Toggling between "Save for Web" and "Save as" will automatically switch to whichever option currently has the file type selected. You can still save your work to a file of your choice if you'd rather not use either of these options. Once you have selected a particular file type in the "File" menu, you can save to that file type as you would any other file. Saving with "Save for Web" will automatically convert the file into one or more Web-optimized formats. You can see the exact specifications for each format from the Options dialog. The dialog contains the same options you would find in "Save for Web" under the "Layout & Quality" heading. Saving to "Save for Web" will take place without any "Save" dialog, rather than using the traditional "Save As" dialog that's used when you're saving to other types of files. Matt Damon has directed and starred in two films in a row: What's Your Number?, which opens today, and this weekend's The Great Hack. Both movies are a departure for Damon, whose past credits include Good Will Hunting, The Talented Mr. Ripley, Six Degrees of Separation, The Bourne Identity, The Departed, and Elysium. Even his performances have leaned toward "realistic" — from his James Garner-like performance in the gritty drama Argo, through his turn in Good Will Hunting, to the Burt Reynolds-like role he played in this year's Downsizing. So it was interesting when Damon began promoting the upcoming movie The Great Hack, in which he plays a reporter for the New York Times who uncovers a massive data breach that also exposes the journalists who covered it. Damon spoke about his reaction to learning about the hack with a group of reporters in New York City on Tuesday. "I was genuinely surprised that it was happening," Damon said, "and I was horrified that it was happening to anybody who was committing to the principles that make the New York Times what it is." He added: "I found it really upsetting. I don't think you can really process that there are people who are so completely greedy, so pure in their ambition for money, for profit at the expense of other people's lives, that they would do that." Damon said he began asking questions and eventually worked himself through some of the numbers to realize what kind of potential financial windfall there was. "I thought, 'Well, yeah, they're not going to admit it, but $30 billion is a lot of money.' Then I started looking at the pay scale of the people who cover it. I figured, you know, they're making $2 million a year, and they are given raises every year. You know, I mean, this is big-time journalism. These are the people who are the best and brightest and the most qualified. They're in the process of getting raises every year. They're not getting the pay increases of the companies they work for, but the companies are getting huge increases in profits." Damon acknowledges his anger, then. "But you look at those numbers and you start thinking about it,

No need to keep rebooting these fixes. A TeamTalk Daily writer works at a computer that his mother gave him. A loud, constant beep was driving him crazy. After trashing his computer, he found that the beep was coming from a small volume icon that sat on the screen. A few clicks and he realized the problem: whenever he typed in text, he would beep repeatedly. It turns out that his PC's audio jack was loose, so when the computer was powered on, the noise produced by the beep was audible. He simply needed to tighten the screw that connected the jack to the PC. This is a team talk script that runs in the Moment. If you have access to Silverlight (including the Silverlight 5 version for non-Windows 8 systems), you can install Silverlight on your computer, allowing you to use the script.
