All you have to do is connect your Google Chrome Browser with your Google account. In my case I am using Gmail account. Then follow the Google Chrome port forwarding instructions. First, make sure your web is working properly on your computer. Next, check your port forwarding settings on your router. In my case, I am using Asuswrt-ng (Router) software. The port forwarding settings for Google Chrome are basically simple and straightforward. Let's start with the port forwarding settings To setup your port forwarding, you need to have your Google Chrome Browser as well as a static IP address and DNS information. A static IP address tells your router, which IP address to use instead of your DHCP address to connect with the internet. Having a static IP is important for your router. To setup port forwarding for your Google Chrome Browser, you need to first set up your Google Chrome browser. In my case, it's Google Chrome 36. Once
