We all know Google's Trends but did you know that you can get trend data on specific keywords right from the search results page? This simple Chrome extension can do just that, and it's completely free to use. The Google Trends Tool is meant to answer an important question - Do people search for this term or not? But what happens if you want to see how searches have changed over the past years for a particular keyword? The answer is simple: Google Trends Online Report. This new addition to the original Google Trends tool allows you to compare the relative search interest for different search queries, for any given year, and for any location in the world. Google Trends Online Report, Google's flagship for comparing search interest trends, is now also available for the Google Apps Marketplace, bringing the very popular Trends tool to a much broader audience. Google Trends is an amazing tool that lets you see how people are using the search engine to find information. It allows you to find trends in the search term over time, and even examine the geographic distribution of those trends. Although the regular Google Trends tool lets you do this, it only tracks searches in the US. By contrast, Trends Online Report is designed to track searches in any country in the world. To make it easier to compare one country with another, Trends Online Report includes an overlay, showing the number of searches for a selected country over the past years. In addition, Trends Online Report lets you choose which time frame you want to view the data in. You can choose to compare search interest from the past year, the past five years, or the past ten years. If you want to view search interest for a single keyword, you can also select it from the list of available queries. Google Trends is a tool that lets you see how the Internet is using your search term and variations of that search term. For example, how many people were searching for the term "Jordache" in the last year, or last five years? If you see an interesting trend in the number of searches, you can click the Trends Online button to compare search trends with other countries. But what happens if you want to compare search trends for a specific term from one year to the next? You can do this with the new Google Trends Online Report. This tool allows you to compare the relative search interest for different search queries, for any given year, and for any location in the world. Google Trends Online Report, Google's
