Friday, November 25, 2012 There is really no way to overstate the significance of today's ruling in Shelby County v. Holder, which struck down certain provisions of the Voting Rights Act. The battle between those in the majority and minority reside in separate and unequal states? How can the entire nation, no matter where they reside, be considered equal when some people lack a right to vote, something that we took for granted when we first became a country as a result of the much anticipated Voting Rights Act. The VRA was written to prevent states from disenfranchising citizens based on race, color or gender. Many of the people who were classified as non-citizens by the Senate committee who f30f4ceada
