Most people will first notice the new look when they log in to their WP dashboards to add a new post, and they'll see a New Post tab along with the standard Post Edit screen, which is essentially a regular page with a WordPress "New" button. "This is one of the things that's getting lots of attention from the beta testing community, so that's going to be your first hit if you don't know what the dashboard is," WordPress developer and blogger David Walsh told Mashable in an interview. The Posts menu item will also be replaced with a new one that'll take you straight to the New Post screen. Walsh said that users shouldn't really notice a major change when they're editing an existing post. "What we're doing is really adding the ability to quickly change between drafts, post, and show." "As a writer, I just want to be able to go and write my post, and then publish it when I'm done." Bloggers also get a word about the New Post screen. "If you think about it, on a personal level, people might be thinking, I want to be able to see all the different posts that I've written," he said. "Maybe on a different blog, I'd be thinking, I want to be able to see all the posts that I want to write. This will help alleviate that." WordPress 4 is expected to be released in the next three months. The image shows how the "New Post" screen will look when logged into WordPress. The Dashboard Changes. We've also seen some changes to the dashboard, including the Posts menu items, which will now take you straight to the New Post screen. All this is a part of the new 4.0 feature, which will also allow users to import posts from other blogs into their WordPress dashboard.

We investigated the proliferative response of a bone marrow monocyte-macrophage progenitor cell line (M1) to a growth factor-containing culture supernatant from PHA-stimulated human lymphocytes (RCS) and the response of a granulocyte-macrophage progenitor cell line (GM) to the same supernatant. These progenitor cell lines were maintained in liquid suspension cultures for 2 days in a medium containing only 10% fetal calf serum, and all factors added to the culture medium were replaced. Both M1 and GM cells cultured in medium containing RCS and LIF proliferated in a dose-dependent manner. In the absence of RCS, GM 77a5ca646e
