Methylthioadenosine phosphorylase (MTH1), a protein that is responsible for eliminating thio-derivatives of methylated bases from the cell, is downregulated in breast cancer. Methylation levels of the CpGs in the MTH1 promoter region are correlated with the negative prognosis of breast cancer. In this study, the effects of phenolic compounds on the expression of MTH1 in breast cancer cell lines were examined. Thio-derivatives, such as 5-azacytidine, 6-thio-2'-deoxy-adenosine, and 5-azacitidine, as well as their thio-derivatives, were shown to induce apoptosis in breast cancer cell lines through MTH1 downregulation. Especially, when used together with 5-azacitidine, the phenolic compounds promoted the combination therapy effect. MTH1 was downregulated by chloroquine, a drug that inhibits the phagosome maturation and the autophagic progression in the cytos
