The samples were processed using the MOCVD growth technique at a nominal substrate temperature of 560C. After exposure to alpha particles for a varying times at room temperature, the samples were analysed by energy dispersive x-ray spectroscopy and electron microscopy (SEM, TEM). This video shows the bullet-shaped sample (not intended to be used in the experiment) being mounted onto a cold source electron microscope. It also shows the use of a cold sample holder for the temperature-dependent synchrotron x-ray diffraction experiments. The x-ray diffraction patterns reveal that some of the GaN film grain boundaries can be formed by a miscut epitaxial growth of the GaN layer, and we can use the long-range periodicity of this boundary to

There is increasing evidence that genetic factors contribute significantly to the complex genetic etiology of autism spectrum disorders (ASDs). Autistic individuals and their relatives show an elevated rate of autism spectrum disorder, indicating the presence of an overrepresentation of genetic factors in the syndrome and suggesting a genetic cause in at least a fraction of individuals. However, it is not clear whether a single major locus or a limited number of genes can be identified using genome-wide searches in autism or even in limited samples. Therefore, we examined the level of linkage disequilibrium (LD) and local genomic
