Drug arrest: Marijuana teen sexually assaulted in Noblesville A 16-year-old girl told police that two boys pulled out sexual favors from her at gunpoint during a drug buy-bust near Noblesville High School in the 2300 block of East 100th Street. The boys, who were 17 and 18 at the time, forced the girl to perform sexual acts and then threatened to shoot her if she did not comply, Noblesville police said. The girl willingly engaged in the activity, and the boys took about $20 in cash from her, the police report said. The girl told police that she knew the boys from school. One of the teens was arrested and charged with robbery, forcible confinement and sexual misconduct with a minor. The other teen was released pending a juvenile court date. This invention relates to ski masts, and more particularly to ski masts of the type which are suspended from and are secured at their upper ends to the free ends of a pair of parallel support poles. In conventional masts of the above-indicated type the support poles are mounted in fixed relation at one end to a skier's glove, and in relative movement within the skier's glove for angular movement. For many years, it has been the common practice to connect the support poles at their upper ends with a force transmitting, generally flexible connection having the form of an elongated resilient strap which passes over the free ends of the support poles. Such a connection has been found to transmit

The government's National Innovation Council has developed an innovation charter aimed at encouraging private sector participation in the nation's nascent innovation ecosystem. The charter lays out a vision for the sector as a whole, including prioritizing a culture of innovation in the private sector. "In many ways, the council is a sort of brain trust for the private sector in innovation," said Margaret Ching, a founder of the San Francisco-based lab that has been part of the council's work. Ching now works at the Innovation Lab at AspenTech, a Silicon Valley nonprofit that was the lab's first home. The council has held 14 meetings since it began in April, and Ching says each one has been useful for figuring out what others are facing in the innovation ecosystem — for example, what challenges entrepreneurs face in accessing funding and other types of support. "It's not just about thinking of innovative solutions, but also about thinking about how we create a structure and a climate for the private sector to invest in and excel in innovation," she said. But the council has also had its share of missteps. For example, Ching said that the group struggled to come up with a firm definition of what exactly it is that the private sector will be creating for the country. As a result, there was a lot of back and forth, and a different working definition was eventually adopted. "A lot of people are interested in what entrepreneurship is, but in our conversations about what a thriving private sector looks like, entrepreneurship is not
