The rice husk is the most abundant biodegradable material in the world and is mainly produced by burning. Pyrolysis is used as a promising technology to convert rice husk into biochar and oils. In this study, the valorization of rice husk via pyrolysis was systematically investigated. The experimental results indicated that the optimal conditions for the valorization of rice husk were as follows: temperature (650°C), airflow rate (3 L/min), holding time (60 min), and heating rate (5°C/min). The optimum condition could be applied to pyrolyze rice husk to get the maximum total energy, oil yield, and oil quality. Under the optimal conditions, the rice husk produced biochar with the highest yield and the highest total energy. The biochar and pyrolysis oils have potential as a fuel to replace coal in the future. Skype home is a privacy tool to help protect your privacy online, it allows you to view and manage the sites you visit while on the internet. You can also find out more about your own activities and limit the information that websites see, for example, who you are and what you are doing. If you use Skype on a regular basis, then you know that it does a great job of keeping your Skype conversations private. Skype messages are encrypted with a 128 bit encryption and this means that only you and Skype can decode them. They are not stored on Skype's servers and you don't have to worry about them being read by any third parties. For people who use Skype on a more regular basis, then having Skype home is a great way to take your privacy even further. With Skype home you can disable Skype from automatically displaying advertisements in its home window, thus preventing advertising from interrupting your Skype conversations and showing up on your screen while you are using it. You can also view and manage the websites you are visiting while you are using Skype, making sure that the information you provide to websites is only visible to you and not to others. If you use Skype home on a regular basis, then you will quickly find that you have more control over the sites that you visit. If you have not yet tried it out, then it is well worth a look.
