Sockso is a free socks proxy that lets you surf the internet anonymously. Just type and then domain name into Sockso's URL bar and you are automatically logged into the website through a hidden Socks server running on your machine. As you can imagine, Sockso can be used for a variety of purposes. For instance, you can use it to access restricted or blocked websites that you are not allowed to access normally, stay anonymous when doing online banking or to securely browse your favorite websites from anywhere in the world. That being said, Sockso is free and is easy to use, but what if it is not working? Is there an alternative to Sockso that works just like Sockso? To find out, we set up a test to see if it was really working. First, we downloaded the program and installed it on a Windows 7 computer. We then signed up for a free account and downloaded the necessary software to make the test. The purpose of the test was to use Sockso while surfing the web. When you use Sockso, the website you are visiting connects through a proxy server called a Socks server. Your traffic goes through the server, but as the traffic is encrypted, the recipient of the traffic can't see your real IP address. To test Sockso, we used a free online proxy tool called Burp Suite to spoof the Socks server that Sockso connects through. Burp Suite is a free tool to test and explore the strengths and weaknesses of an encrypted site. For the test, we used the site and then went to its direct address using our Burp Suite spoofed server. Since the website is using a Socks server, we ran the test through Sockso. The results showed that Sockso was working perfectly and that it successfully spoofed the Socks server and made it appear as if the website was using our spoofed server. Overall, Sockso is a great way to browse the internet anonymously. Sockso is free and easy to use, however, if you experience issues with it, you can always use it to take an online test to see if it is actually working. Final thought With Sockso, you are instantly anonymous on the internet. Because the Socks proxy servers are run on your own computer, they are not affected by antivirus software. It is easy to use and is safe to use. The 77a5ca646e
