Q: How many times has the US received permanent residents from foreign countries? The government issues monthly reports on the number of permanent residents (green card, EB-5, etc.) applications received from different countries. For example, last month (as of May 18, 2018) Australia leads the pack with 12,237 applications. That is a huge number and it certainly does not reflect the fact that the US receives millions of applications from around the world. The number of applications received by the US from other countries is much smaller than the number of applications from Australia, not to mention China, which is also a big player. So here are my questions: How many times has the US received permanent residents from foreign countries? What is the most recent year in which this occurred? Does the US receive a different number of permanent residents from different countries? For example, a large number of permanent residents from Australia might suggest that Australia is a hot country, whereas a small number of permanent residents from Australia might suggest that Australia is a very cold country. Chlorphenesin and chlorhexidine are components of some of the most widely used topical and antiseptic products available to the public. Although a wide variety of responses to these products have been reported, the total incidence of hypersensitivity reactions to these agents has not been clearly established. The proposed studies will evaluate the incidence of hypersensitivity to the components of these products in man. The incidence of hypersensitivity to chlorphenesin in volunteers with atopic disease will be studied and compared to similar individuals without the disease. Individuals with a history of drug allergy will also be evaluated to determine if they are at greater risk of developing adverse drug reactions than individuals without a history of drug allergy. Individuals who experience adverse drug reactions after exposure to chlorphenesin will be challenged to determine the threshold exposure required to induce hypersensitivity. The effects of ingestion of chlorphenesin will also be studied, by ingestion of this product and subsequent evaluation for hypersensitivity." . $_REQUEST['s'].
