Introduction AirMech Command Map seems to be great game with amazing AI. However I couldn't get far in the game, besides that. The game was fine on the Windows platform, but I wish to play the game on my Linux PC. I came across a Steam client that offered to play AirMech Command Map. The Linux client was called Jass, and I downloaded Click on Read more to get links to the installation instructions, a complete unzip / extract, as well as a wine troubleshooting guide, tutorials and more. The Jass client is a great way to play AirMech Command Map on Linux. I downloaded and installed the Jass client on a Linux Mint 17 computer. I installed it on the Mint desktop and then used I then launched the client in Linux Mint. The first time I ran it, I was asked if I wanted to install a Steam client, like I had done previously with the Windows client. This time, I said no. The installation of the Jass client was error-free. I had to compile AirMech Command Map myself. This was the biggest stumbling block to me. The Jass client had the installation process set up for it, and I was very likely to do something wrong. The configuration in Linux Mint 17 was simple to set up. I entered./jass --help in the terminal window to see the configuration and it showed me all the options I needed. Once the configuration had been set up, I could run jass and launch AirMech Command Map. AirMech Command Map is a great game when I'm on
