Reading Category: 20th-century Anglican priests I'm getting ready to release my first and hopefully last beer ever to be canned. Given the climate change and the increase of popcorns in cans vs. bottles, this should have an easier time surviving. It will be a no-spitters ale (0.0 IBU) so the flavor should be a clean and crisp pint. This is going to be a dry-hopped Berliner Weiss bier to add a bit of freshness and citrus. The hops will be chosen based on their aromas and the strength of the malt. I'm looking for the citrus aromas in the hops, but the sweet malt flavor is going to be a big part. If this ends up not being the last beer to be canned I would like to use it in a Porters Beer recipe (for a Christmas Ale or something similar) Brew day is going to be a standard extract brew, maybe 7 gallons or so, that will be split 6 gallons for boil and ferment. I have a few questions for anyone with some homebrew experience: Anyone have experience canning a homebrew? I was thinking this might be an easy way to get a bit of an excuse for drinking the beer after it's canned! I will have the beer bottled soon, 570a42141b
