Dose-response relationship between the maximal dose of 0.0025, 0.005, and 0.01 mg/kg human atrial natriuretic polypeptide (hANP) given as a continuous infusion and natriuresis in normotensive conscious rats.

To clarify the dose dependency of hANP-induced natriuresis, we studied the dose-response relationship between the maximal dose of 0.0025, 0.005, and 0.01 mg/kg hANP and natriuresis in conscious rats on different days and at three different doses of hANP (0.0025, 0.005, and 0.01 mg/kg). hANP (0.0025, 0.005, and 0.01 mg/kg) given as a continuous infusion evoked natriuresis of four- to sixfold the basal level. The maximal dose was the lowest hANP-induced natriuresis dose (0.0025 mg/kg). The order of the maximal hANP dose-induced natriuresis was 0.005 > 0.01 > 0.01. The time course study for each maximal dose of hANP showed an increase in natriuresis to reach a maximum within 15 min of hANP infusion and a return to baseline after 60 min, irrespective of dose. To clarify the continuous infusion study, the maximal hANP dose (0.0025 mg/kg) was infused for either 20 min or 160 min by a mini-osmotic pump. The maximum natriuretic response was exhibited in rats that had been infused for 20 min. The response was significantly smaller in rats that had been infused for 160 min. The time course study for the maximal hANP dose (0.0025 mg/kg) showed the same time-dependent natriuresis. These results suggest that the maximal hANP-induced natriuresis dose (0.0025 mg/kg), but not the maximal hANP dose itself, reflects the maximal ANP-induced natriuresis dose. These results also suggest that the maximal hANP-induced
