Dandelion Vodka Dandelion Vodka is a vodka made from the dandelion plant. The dandelion plant has been used as a forage crop since the 15th century in France. At first it was used as a vegetable, but is now mostly used as fodder. It is also used as a culinary and animal fodder in many countries. The dandelion plant is known as a medicinal plant because of its health properties, which are considered comparable to wheat and barley. With the exception of fermenting with a microbial strain, making an alcohol out of dandelion plants is a very similar process to making wine from grapes, and dandelion vodka is therefore fermented with a traditional strain of yeast. Dandelion Vodka is produced in the Alsace region in France, where the annual harvest is regulated by a nationwide competition. In the harvest season, producers can place bets on the quantity of their harvest for the year. References Category:French
