Multiple myeloma is a malignant plasma cell neoplasm characterized by the proliferation of abnormal plasma cells in the bone marrow. Diagnosis requires the presence of more than 10% plasma cells in the bone marrow or more than one myeloma-related lesion on imaging studies, in association with a monoclonal M-protein in the serum or urine. Age is the most important risk factor. Other factors related to the rate of progression, response to therapy, and survival are, for the most part, stage of the disease and performance status. Bone marrow plasma cell infiltration is the most significant prognostic factor in patients with newly diagnosed disease. The treatment of multiple myeloma is based on the sequential use of three drugs: melphalan (Alkeran), prednisone, and doxorubicin (Adriamycin). For newly diagnosed patients, the objective response rate to these three drugs is approximately 50%, although it has been shown that response duration is increased when a second treatment is used in this setting. Patients who respond to induction therapy can be offered autologous stem cell transplantation. Approximately 30% of patients with myeloma have had a previous diagnosis of breast cancer. The most important factors related to survival in breast cancer and multiple myeloma are stage of the disease and performance status. The treatment of breast cancer and multiple myeloma can be difficult in the same patient, as the two diseases are often treated differently, and prognosis can be significantly different. The administration of chemotherapy to patients with multiple myeloma is more complex than that of patients with breast cancer, as multiple myeloma treatment can cause bone marrow suppression and anemia.

Therefore, the treatment of multiple myeloma with multiple myeloma drugs, if the benefit outweighs the risk, is controversial. A study by England's Centre for Academic Primary Care has examined how many GP consultations were avoided because of the use of a whole-systems approach to identifying a patient's care needs. The authors conducted a systematic review of 34 studies to examine the extent to which general practices had reduced or avoided care. In 36.4% of cases, the researchers found that a whole-systems approach to care-finding was associated with fewer GP consultations than usual care, and in 42.9
