We have examined whether the N-methyl-D-aspartate (NMDA) receptor antagonist MK-801 would prevent the neurotoxic effects of methamphetamine in several brain regions and whether these effects would be seen in an animal which is not dependent on dopamine for its dopamine-mediated behaviours. In saline-treated animals, single administration of methamphetamine at both 0.3 and 1.0 mg/kg caused a decrease in the metabolism of the specific dopamine transporter marker [3H]cocaine in the striatum and nucleus accumbens after 30 min; however, these changes did not occur in the hippocampus, frontal cortex or thalamus. MK-801, at the dose of 0.1 mg/kg, significantly prevented the methamphetamine-induced decreases in striatal uptake. In animals given repeated methamphetamine, MK-801, at a dose of 0.1 mg/kg, prevented the methamphetamine-induced decreases in nucleus accumbens and striatal but not hippocampal nor frontal cortical uptake. These data suggest that NMDA-mediated post-synaptic transmission may play an important role in the methamphetamine-induced decreases in the transport of endogenous dopamine. Furthermore,
