In the fabrication of semiconductor devices, it is common to form a metal feature to one side of a semiconductor substrate. The metal feature is often in the form of a metal line. In many such instances, the metal line is in the form of a trench or damascene structure. In order to improve the performance of semiconductor devices, it is important to provide a higher current density in the active regions of the devices. In order to achieve higher current density, the resistance of the metal line should be reduced to a minimum. One common problem in the formation of metal lines is the formation of high stress points along the interface of the line and the semiconductor substrate. The stress points, which may be caused by the deposition process and/or polishing process, can cause metal line failures. In many instances, as the width of the metal lines decrease, the failures become more prevalent. A continuing goal in semiconductor processing is to reduce the number of metal line failures. It would be advantageous to develop a metal line that reduces stress points, thereby reducing the number of failures and extending the lifetimes of metal lines. Monday, September 19, 2012 Kolkata: Rangoon Wave The ferocious monsoon wave from the Bay of Bengal was all set to engulf the city of Kolkata with its fury. Over the last week, it has been quite clear that the heavy downpour has been wreaking havoc and finally it has made the city to almost feel like living in the middle ages. No rain is heard, no water to drink, only wall-to-wall water everywhere. Most part of the city is submerged in the onslaught of the torrential rains. In the wake of the rains, the water levels in the Hooghly River have increased to a considerable height. One of the important roads of the city, namely Kalighat Kali, has also been under the waters for a long time. The water has not only submerged the road but also all the shops along the road. That said, if you drive along the road, you can see huge water-logged vehicles floating along the road. As per the reports, the water has risen to such a level that it is threatening the life of the residents living in the area.

KEYMACRO is a secure password based application used to decrypt messages and to send messages which are impossible to decipher by using a given password. The simple and intuitive app allows you to save your desired passphrase to a TXT file, which you can later give to someone else in order to be able to decipher a message. Typography Share This Secure Messenger for Business Atlas Quantum Network Technology, a company known for its groundbreaking and disruptive technologies, is introducing its new messenger, Cipher, to the business community. Cipher delivers the latest security innovations, enabling businesses to communicate securely across private, public, and hybrid networks. Cipher delivers instant message notifications, cross-platform notifications, and encrypted files on the demand of the user. Users can personalize the level of security they want to use when receiving messages. Businesses can choose to not have messages encrypted, for example, if they are not concerned with the data in the message. Atlas Quantum Network Technology is a company whose mission is to provide the industry with innovative products, which support, enhance, and create revolutionary ways of using the cloud and network technologies to solve business problems. The company developed the first commercially available quantum computer in the world. It has filed patents for its technology. “The new messaging app will help enable safe and secure communication between businesses and consumers,” said Atlas Quantum Network Technology Chief Executive Officer Jim Kriesel. “This brings to market the latest innovations from Atlas Quantum Network Technology, providing a useful and innovative service to businesses around the world.” A key feature of Cipher is an encrypted email feature, which allows businesses to send and receive encrypted messages to the end users. Businesses can also personalize the encryption type for every message received, meaning they can encrypt everything, or only some types of messages. The application works on top of all existing software and services and doesn’t require an additional subscription for the business. “As businesses adopt the Cloud and enable end-users to work from anywhere in the world, Cipher will be a key tool in helping them communicate safely with customers, partners, and each other,” said Chris Wysopal, founder of VeraCrypt. Cipher is not limited to businesses, but can be used by anyone. Users can send and receive messages to and from any device, including mobile phones and computers. Cipher is a safe and secure application, which encrypts and decrypts data stored on the user’ 77a5ca646e
