Preliminary experience with open distal bypass of the aorta in elderly patients. Percutaneous endovascular therapy for infrainguinal peripheral arterial disease is an attractive alternative to open revascularization in many cases, but the outcomes in elderly patients are less well known. A limited number of reports suggest that open revascularization can be performed in a subset of patients, but more experience is needed. A retrospective study was performed of all patients older than age 75 years who underwent open distal aortic bypass (DAO) between 1998 and 2007 at a single institution. Preoperative assessment consisted of medical evaluation, physical examination, and radiologic imaging with duplex ultrasound and/or CT angiography. Operative details and postoperative outcome were assessed. Over a 7.5-year period, 23 patients underwent DAO. The median age was 82 years, and the male/female ratio was 20/3. Seventeen patients (74%) presented with limb-threatening ischemia, 12 patients (52%) had diabetes, and 13 patients (57%) presented with critical limb ischemia. Indications for surgery included critical limb ischemia (CLI) in 13 patients (57%), occlusive disease with symptomatic stenosis in 7 patients (30%), and CLI in 4 patients (17%). The mean aortic length was 14 cm, and the common femoral artery was the preferred conduit for distal revascularization. The overall operative and in-hospital mortality rates were 5% and 14%, respectively. Postoperative limb salvage at 2 years was 69% (95% confidence interval, 49% to 88%). On follow-up (median, 22 months), 5 patients (22%) underwent minor amputation; 13 patients (57%) had a repeat bypass procedure. This study showed that open DAO is feasible in elderly
