Why the Fireworks Were Displayed During the Fireworks Display I suppose you could say that both of the Big Bad Wolves and the Kisses For My Birthday display during the 4th of July Celebration were a bit risqué. They were kind of trying to be cute and I liked both of them, but in reality, they were kind of not cool at all. I mean, not at all. I am an animal lover, so the idea of seeing a live animal being used for an Independence Day display isn't exactly appealing to me. I mean, what if it got hurt? What if it died? I'm not an animal lover, so I'm glad they took it off the line. If you're not an animal lover, you may not have thought about it, but you can be honest with yourself and admit that you just don't like seeing animals on display. I do understand why there was a mini Kisses For My Birthday display. It's basically a comedy routine, and it's considered a Big Bad Wolf tradition. It's just not my kind of tradition. I don't mind seeing the Big Bad Wolves. That was a tradition. I just don't like seeing live animals displayed. It's like, "Come on!" It's not a cute little thing like a kitten or a puppy. It's a live animal. A live animal. I know some people say, "Well, they're going to eat the animal anyway." That may be true. I suppose I can understand that, but it doesn't really make it better. I don't like it, so that's that. After talking to some people, I realize that the person who took the Fireworks display photos didn't even realize that there were live animals in the display until after the fact. If she had, she would have been shocked that anyone would do that and then we wouldn't be having this conversation. That's too bad. Even though I don't like
