Wolfram Alpha allows you to get results directly from web pages, answer math problems, display simple mathematical relations, compute financial data, among a thousand other things. For example, you can ask "What is the square root of 32?" or "What are the prime factors of 1,000,000?" and after just a few seconds you'll have the answer. What's cool is that the end result is, well, really amazing. Plus, you can annotate the result with simple text to add more context, like: "9,400,000" means that the number is almost 9 million. Best part is that the Wolfram Desktop gadget is not in any way connected to your Internet connection. It works fully offline and connects only once to the Wolfram server, at the time you start the first query, so there's no data usage whatsoever. Wolfram Desktop is simple to setup and works with all operating systems. After that you could also try the cli: $./wolfram --help What is the square root of 64? Wolfram Mobile App Wolfram Mobile is an application built based on the Wolfram Language Server and is created entirely using Javascript and HTML5 technologies. Wolfram Mobile can be used to answer and create queries. One of the interesting features is that Wolfram Mobile runs in the same environment as your mobile device which means that you can share your results with the world, including presenting your results on TV, or tweeting. For example, you can use

Wolfram Mobile to render HTML pages directly from your mobile phone. Wolfram Desktop Gadget Description: Wolfram Desktop enables you to ask questions and get answers in a reliable and easy-to-use interface, using the Wolfram Language. Because results are created through dynamic computation and processing using the Wolfram Language, results are instantaneously updated and available in real time. You can easily share your completed Math process with your friends and others using social media, such as Facebook. You can also easily view results on devices such as the big screen, with no extra effort. Wolfram Desktop runs on Mac OS X 10.7 and 10.6, Microsoft Windows Vista, 7, 8, and XP. Special Notes: Wolfram Desktop Gadget requires an Intel-based Mac or PC running Mac OS X 10.7.4 or Windows Vista, 7, 8, and XP. 09e8f5149f

(Unless they had something other than a disc drive - then please run, don't walk, from here until you find out more! lol) I had an Apple clone computer (Machine and Piano, different model, but the same basic idea - it was a 12" laptop with its own disk drive) for a long time, until around 2000. It was quite expensive, and slow, but I still had it until 2007, when it failed (apart from stopping working around 2000/2001). It was a pity because it was a good-looking computer, and the case was of nice quality, and it handled WordPerfect files (I had some for some years, until I found free Wordperfect somewhere on the Internet). I won't go to the trouble of trying to find it again, but I still have the original documentation - it was produced by Apple, in that letter-headed folder, with the Apple logo on top. Apple was nice enough to supply me with a few Apple-formatted discs, including the MacOS install disk for my Apple IIe. I downloaded that, and used it successfully to install MacOS for my Mac clones. I do remember my computer having a little green light inside the machine, so that it could indicate that it had power (and was on), and I remember the screen being a yellow-brown colour, which gave it some heritage - my imagination..:) The word processor I used was also MacOS
