Watch Agyaat 720p in hindi dubbed full movie download VEGF-A, a potent angiogenic factor, is produced in normal human aortic endothelial cells via reactive oxygen species-induced mRNA destabilization. Vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF)-A is a potent angiogenic factor, and plays a crucial role in normal and malignant vascular angiogenesis. The mechanisms regulating VEGF-A production in endothelial cells are not yet fully understood. The present study was undertaken to investigate whether reactive oxygen species (ROS) regulate the transcriptional and post-transcriptional expression of VEGF-A in cultured human aortic endothelial cells. Stimulation with H₂O₂ decreased the amount of VEGF-A mRNA in a dose- and time-dependent manner. This was accompanied by enhanced phosphorylation of IκappaBalpha and p65 subunit of nuclear factor kappaB, which is consistent with elevated activity of NFκappaB. H₂O₂ also significantly increased VEGF-A promoter activity. Interestingly, treatment with ROS donor diquat, or overexpression of a dominant negative mutant of IκappaBalpha, markedly rescued the effects of H₂O₂. Although the mechanism is unknown, these results suggest that NFκappaB is a critical regulator in ROS-induced VEGF-A expression. Consistently, activation of NFκappaB was associated with increased protein stability and decreased 3e33713323
