Monday, February 21, 2011 Introduction A Little Background I'm a pretty normal girl, nothing spectacular about me. The only truly odd thing is that I'm one of the most organized people you will ever meet, yet I had the hardest time keeping my house organized. When I moved in to my new apartment, I decided to work on my organization skills. I have been using Pinterest for a while and really started using it when I was pregnant with Izzy, I can always count on it to show me what cute things there are that I want to buy. I look at it all the time now, especially in the morning when I am getting ready for the day or when I am laying in bed. Story I had an idea to start a blog so that I could post pictures of cute things that I get on there, but I also wanted to share with others what organization is and how it has helped me. Most of us cannot just go out and buy a closet or a desk

The columns can be added and it's OK. My problem is: I have a column with a comboBox, the itemsSource is the DataSource and the DisplayMember is the text of the comboBox selected item When I run the application, the DataGridView is blank On DataBound event I create new columns depending on the comboBoxes selected item, but they don't appear I added a "Focused" event to the DataGridView1, which changes the control of
